

all the information, none of the junk | biotech • healthcare • life sciences

Xconomy Awards: The Finalists Are....

Corie Lok

August 8th, 2017

@corielok

@xconomy

Like Us

Xconomy Boston — The nominees for our first ever Xconomy Awards were an impressive bunch, and represent a wide range of the technologies, approaches, and yes, personalities, that are all driving Boston biotech today. There's a lot of talent in this town, so narrowing the list of more than 250 nominations down to a handful of finalists in each category took a lot discussion and debate amongst our editors and our esteemed panel of judges.

We are pleased to say that this effort has produced an outstanding group of 53 finalists in 10 categories. (Eagle-eyed readers will spy the names of some of the judges and their colleagues/companies on the list—rest assured that they have been diligent about recusing themselves from judging where they had a conflict of interest.) The judges are now hard at work helping us to pick the winners.

We will celebrate these people, companies, and organizations and present the winners with their awards on Tuesday September 26 at our Awards Gala at the Hynes Convention Center. Tickets are on sale now for those of you who'd like to join the fun.

In the meantime, stay tuned for more stories over the next few weeks that will highlight the finalists and show just what made them stand out from some very tough competition.

FINALISTS

Big Idea

Arrakis Therapeutics

Bridge Project

Andrew Lo, MIT Sloan School of Management

ReadCoor

Sync Project